Uber Says CEO's Meeting With London Regulator Was 'Constructive'

Uber Technologies Inc. won't be able to resolve a dispute any time soon with London transportation authorities who have threatened to ban the ride-hailing service in the city.

Chief Executive Officer Dara Khosrowshahi flew to London for a meeting Tuesday with Transport for London to try to salvage Uber's business in its largest European market. The two sides didn't reach a deal, but pledged to continue negotiations in the weeks ahead. In the meantime, Uber is working on an appeal of the ruling and must file by Oct. 13. During the appeal process, the company's cars can remain on the road.

"Our new CEO had a constructive meeting with the Transport Commissioner this afternoon," Uber said in a statement. "We hope to have further discussions over the coming weeks as we are determined to make things right in London."

Mattis Says Staying in the Iran Nuclear Deal Is in the U.S.'s Interest

Defense Secretary Jim Mattis told lawmakers it's in the U.S.'s strategic interest to remain in the Iran nuclear deal that President Donald Trump has said he'd like to scrap.

If the U.S. "can confirm that Iran is living by the agreement" with the U.S. and other world powers, "this is something the president should consider staying with," Mattis told the Senate Armed Services Committee Tuesday.

But Mattis also said he supports the Trump administration's "rigorous" review of the deal. He said the U.S. could stay in the multinational accord even if the administration informs Congress by an Oct. 15 deadline that it's "decertifying" Iran's compliance based on its other activities. Trump last month called the agreement an "embarrassment" to the U.S.

A $1 Trillion Fund Doubts Dollar Rally Will Last

Dollar skeptics are extending their bets outside the U.S., even as the greenback rallies.

Amundi SA, which oversees more than $1.1 trillion, prefers to wager on European currencies, including the euro, while Schroder Investment Management Ltd. is putting its money into emerging markets. Eaton Vance Corp. in Boston says improving growth outside the U.S. could see the dollar resume weakening as it has for most of the year.

The U.S. currency rose for the first time in seven months in September as the Federal Reserve said an interest-rate increase in December was still on the table and President Donald Trump announced a plan to cut taxes. The greenback's recovery has been closely correlated with Treasury yields, which have risen for the past three weeks.

Ex-Goldman Banker Leissner Barred From U.S. Securities Industry

Tim Leissner, a senior Goldman Sachs Group Inc. banker before leaving the firm in the wake of its work with Malaysia's embattled investment fund, has been barred from the U.S. securities industry for failing to provide documents to a regulator.

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority issued an indefinite bar on Sept. 11, saying Leissner didn't submit to its requests during an investigation, according to his employment records on Finra's website. Leissner accepted the findings, without admitting or denying them, according to the self-regulatory body.

Leissner, once Goldman Sachs's Southeast Asia chairman, was an adviser to 1Malaysia Development Bhd., an investment fund set up in 2009 to help the nation build infrastructure. 1MDB ultimately became embroiled in allegations of financial irregularities that sparked probes in multiple countries. Leissner left Goldman last year after questions about the fund, his work on an Indonesian mining deal and a reference letter he allegedly wrote.
